This is how we do it

Over the last 14 years, we have had the pleasure of working with great clients across a number of industries and most regions of the world. Our journey together often starts when they have made a decision to undertake one of 3 types of journey.

What typically happens next forms the structure of this toolkit. We initially discuss the business case and drivers for the project and what key activities they currently have planned.

They are often using a specialist company who have provided a lifecycle which will form the structure of the journey.

At the early stages we often discuss the change risks and opportunities that they face on those types of journey, and how we can use the 25 accelerators in this guide in response to these.

These are often mapped against a journey – examples of which are in this guide.

Decision makers and project sponsors should use the tools to understand the change risks, and what types of activities can minimise them.

HR professionals, consultants and change management practitioners should use the tools to plan activities that will minimise these risks and maximise the benefits of such journeys.

We also provide 7 “How to” guides which are a reflection of the most commonly used situations by our consultants.

The Accelerator Guide should be used in conjunction with the products in the toolkit

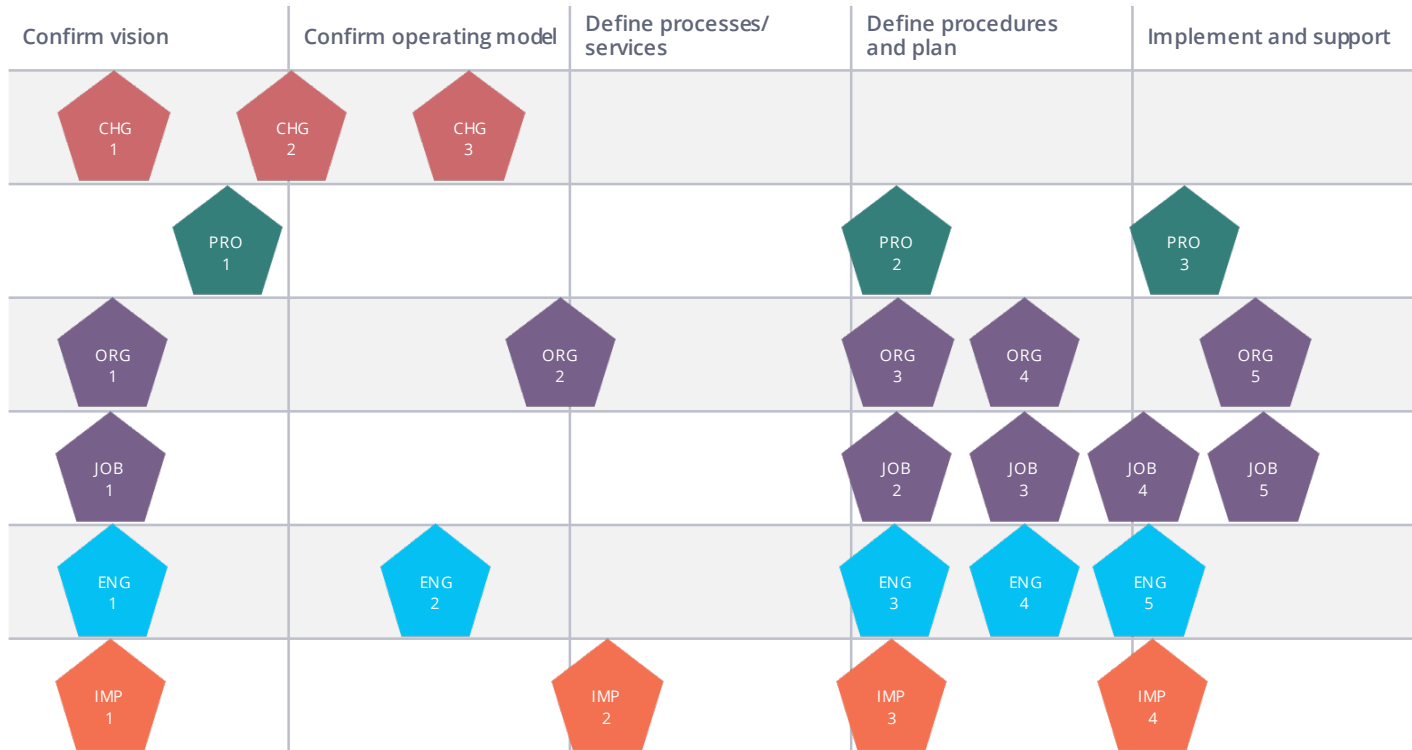

Our consultants use these techniques everyday to support some of the biggest global companies in the world – we hope that you are able to use them in your journeys too.
